LONE HIGHWAYMAN. OPENS UP BUSINESS IN LOUISIANA.

His Haul Foots up $50,000—The Little Sacks Play Their Part.

New Orleans, La., Nov. 3.—The lone highwayman who has been starting it in western Texas seems to have forsaken his usual haunts and has turned his attention it seems to more remunerative pursuits than stage robbing. His opening success has been marvelous and may well encourage him to continue the business. With their usual secrecy and their unusual pertinacity, the railroad and express officials refuse to see or hear anyone seeking news of the robbery, and decline either to affirm or deny any of the numerous rumors that fill the air. But The News correspondent has obtained from private and authentic sources facts that indicate the loss by the express company of not less than $43,000. The facts of the great robbery are substantially these: As the express train on the Queen and Crescent route was running along about 4:30 this morning between Derby and Lacy stations, fifty miles north of here, and while the passengers were fast asleep or dozing a man entered the express car, and approaching Baggage-master Henry McElroy, who was seated about the middle of the car, covered him with a pistol and commanded him to throw up his hands. The command was speedily obeyed and the robber pulled a sack over his head and proceeded to the end of the car, where sat Charles Laurey, so intent on checking off his freight list that he had not observed the intruder until, glancing up, he was looking into the barrel of a sixshooter held by a man who commanded him to throw up his hands. Mr. Laurey dropped his freight book and pencil and complied with alacrity, and he, too, was arrayed in a sack headgear that completely blinded him. When this was done the robber locked the door of the express car and proceeded to empty the contents of the safe into a sack, the blindfolded men judging of his movements by the sound heard.

When he had secured what booty was available he pulled the bell cord and stopped the train as it was nearing Nicholson, a station some forty-five miles from here. The train was quickly started again by the robber, who seemed to be familiar with the management of the bellcord, and it is supposed he disembarked, although his orders to the blindfolded men to continue holding up their hands caused them to believe that he was still on the train, until they were found in this position, paralyzed with terror. When the train stopped temporarily the conductor desiring to ascertain the cause went forward, and on reaching the end of the coach next to the express car found it locked from the outside and the key in the door. The train was stopped and the conductor had the door opened, and when entering the express car found its occupants as described.

The robbery was accomplished so speedily and quickly that the officials did not get more than a glance at the man and would be unable to identify him were they to see him. Only one robber showed himself, and if there were more, no one saw them. A drummer who was in the smoking car said that a man got aboard at a water tank or small station some miles back and took a seat in the front of the car where his face could not be seen. He was not noticed and excited no suspicion. He left the car and went out and stood on the front platform for some time, and finally was lost sight of and was thought of no more until after the robbery.

A Peddler Murdered.

San Diego, Nov. 3.—The inquest held over the remains of the murdered man found near the ranch of George Reynolds, not far from here, by Justice of the Peace Collins developed the following facts: About two months ago a peddler from Hidalgo county, who had before made other trips into Neuces county, replenished his stock of peddler's wares at Collins and collected several old accounts and started in his wagon toward Mr. Reynolds' ranch, and when near there was waylaid and killed, having been struck on the head with an ax, as the shape of the ax was plainly seen on the back of his skull. The pockets of the deceased were turned wrong side out, but the robber and murderer did not find a small leather bag hung around the deceased's neck, which contained $105 in gold, which still remained upon the remains when found Monday.

The calm, cool judgement of the conservative classes in this country shrinks from the election of Harrison, knowing what that election would mean. Harrison might be the nominal president, but the actual ruler would be Blaine. What that would mean the brief period of his sway in the Garfield administration gave indication.—Cleveland Plaindealer.

THE OLD TRYST.

Like the scent of a flower in blooming,
When the dew drops on blossom and tree,
A memory comes sweetly perfuming
The dead past to me.

And the sounds of the words that were spoken
Come floating afar to me now,
Like the leaves that are borne from this broken
And delicate bough.

As I walk through this forest where quivers
The silvery bloom from the stars,
Like the moon, who hangs waning o'er rivers
Wind rippled in bars.

For their kiss takes me back to the tender
Sweet lips that faded too soon,
Like the gleam of the stars or the splendor
That dies with the moon.

—Morley Roberts in Once a Week.

A Bed in Nienaragua.

It consists of an ox hide drawn, while green, tightly over a stout framework of wood, and afterward elaborately polished, so as to look like the head of a drum. When dry, a slab of marble is a soft and downy thing in comparison with it. It was on such a bed as this, with a smooth and gaudily colored potato or mat, and a single sheet spread over the hide, that I was invited to repose.

I examined this new instrument of torture narrowly, and finally turned in with heavy misgivings, particularly as I found that Pedro's mansion was full of fleas, which had already set my nerves on a gallop. I was weary enough, but it was impossible to sleep—the fleas came in hungry squadrons, and the hide bed grew momentarily more rigid and obdurate.

At last I could endure it no longer. A bed on the ground, with my saddle for a pillow and the sky for a roof, would have been a luxury itself compared with this. I got up, unbarred the door, and went out on the corridor. The cool evening air was most welcome, and I vowed audibly not to go to that ox hide bed again, and so remained outside till dawn.—E. G. Squier.

A Speck of Condensed Sweetness.

"Talk about 'sweetness long drawn out,'" exclaimed a friend the other day—"if you want to realize what that term means, you should take into your system a little of the sugar that druggists use in putting up certain preparations of quinine and other drugs. I went into a Third street drug store and the proprietor gave me a taste. He just put a little speck of this sugar on the end of my tongue and informed me that it was just 280 times as sweet as ordinary cane sugar. Well, I should say it was. I tasted that sugar all day long, and there is a faint suggestion of it hovering about my palate even now. The same day I was beguiled into taking that little speck of condensed sweetness on my tongue I smoked four or five cigars and ate a hearty dinner, but the sugar was more powerful than cigars and dinner combined, and I tasted it through the nicotine and roast beef. I really believe honey would have seemed sour after taking such a dose."—Pioneer Press "Last-encor."

A Story of "Larry" Jerome.

One of the best stories told of the late "Larry" Jerome is that when traveling in Florida not very long ago, he stayed at a hotel, the proprietor of which asked him, when he was about to depart, to sign his name in a book not quite like an ordinary hotel register, but one used, after the fashion of an old English custom, for the purpose of obtaining the names of distinguished guests. When Mr. Jerome was about to place his signature with the others, he saw that the writer just before him had inscribed the comment, "I came here for change and rest and got it." Quick as thought the witty citizen peered beneath it. "I also came here for change and rest, but the waiters got the change and the landlord got the rest."—New York Press.

Well Dressed Berlin Women.

We have been a little surprised at the number of well dressed people, or rather at the few badly dressed people, seen on the streets. I never saw so many neatly attired girls, and I don't think that the women of any large city on the globe are so uniformly pretty. One coming from America naturally expects to find the women of Germany very large, bony or fleshy. If you come here with that idea in your head you will be disappointed, for the Prussian women are petite, as a rule, below the average stature, well formed and quick in their movements. The men, however, are large, muscular and somewhat gross in appearance.—Cor. Chicago Times.

From Barbarism to Civilization.

Dr. George Harley, F. R. S., has made an investigation which reveals abundant evidence to prove that although man, during his evolution from barbarism to civilization, has increased in strength and stature and longevity, on the other hand his power of recovery from bodily hurt has materially deteriorated.—New York Star.

Theory of Memory.

Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes' theory is that a certain part of the brain receives impressions like the plate in the camera. They are photographed there and always remain. Sometimes we can recall them at will and sometimes not, but they are there—a theory that leads to very serious thought.—Chicago Herald.

A Liberal Rendering.

In Mississippi one of our teachers taught her class faithfully the golden text, "Put off thy shoes from off thy feet, for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground." The next Sunday only one girl could remember it, and she recited it thus: "Moses, Moses, take off them shoes."—American Missionary.

A Difference of Opinion.

Guest (to mountain house landlord)—I think the amount of this bill is entirely too large.

Landlord—Too large? Just fan yourself, sir, with that bill and get another whiff of the pure, health inspiring mountain air; you'll think it's too small.—New York Sun.

At the Table.

A small girl of 3 years suddenly burst out crying at the dinner table. "Why, Ethel," said her mother, "what is the matter?" "Oh!" whined Ethel, "my teeth stepped on my tongue."—Boston Globe.
